MRS. WEST HURRIEDLY LEAVES STOCK FARM OF BROOKLYN PRIEST

Housekeeper at Far Hills, N. J., Where Father Sanders, of St. Leonard's Roman Catholic Church Bred Trotters, Comes to New York to See Relatives.

NOT MRS. KIPP, ONCE HIS PARISHIONER, HE SAYS.

Woman as She Starts for New York Says She Hopes the Public Will Not to 2) 1, Illskayuna (50 to 1) 2, Believe She Has Done Anything Wrong--Priest Not at Home To-Day

Rev. Father George D. Sander, of St. Leonard's Roman Catholic Church, Brooklyn, left his home to-day after the publication of the story that he had been known at Far Hills, N. J., since 1901 as a horse breeder and horse owner under the name of George West. He had not returned

Nor had the woman who lived at the stock farm and who was known to tradesmen of Far Hills as "Mrs. West," and believed by some persons to have been a former parishioner of the priest, appeared at the home of her mother, to which she had started early in the day from the New Jersey village.

Father Sander has denied this woman was Mrs. Mamie Kipp, who disappeared from her Brooklyn home about two years ago and whose whereabouts has since been unknown to her family, but Mr. Peck, Father sharpness to them were whistling about Sander's partner, has made the statement that he understood the woman's name was really Mrs. Kipp.

WOMAN QUITS THE FARM.

That many strange features of Father Sander's life would be revealed to-day and that her name would be brought into it was known last night by "Mrs. West," and the old farmhouse at Far Hills was the scene of much anxiety during the night.

Louis Peck, brother of the priest's partner and employed as a farm hand, sail to-day: "We all knew it was coming out. Mrs. West, as we called her, paced up and down the rooms all night. She was hysterical all the time and nothing could be done for her. She kept crying aloud, saying:

'What will they think of me? There was nothing wrong, but nobody will believe it,' and 'I must go at once to my relatives in Brooklyn.'

"So my brother took her to Brooklyn on an early train this morning." She was then hysterical and we had an awful time with her.

PRIEST'S VISITS TO THE FARM.

"Father Sander came out here about twice a month. He always left Tersey City at 8.30 in the morning. He usually remained until the 4.30 P. M. train and then returned to New York. Once in awhile he remained all night. When he would come he would take one or two of the trotters out for a drive, taking the woman with him.

"Mrs. West, as we knew her, is a very nice, quiet woman, and we all fiked her. We hope she will come back."

Far Hills is the station at which many rich New Yorkers who have country places near it leave the trains. Judge John F. Dillon and his son have handsome places there, as also have A. B. Kauffman, C. B. Mitchell and William H. Page.

The merchants of Far Hills all knew Father Sander as "Mr. West" and they knew "Mrs. West." They said to-day that there were never better (Continued on Second Page.)
